General Comments During the observation of the three infant rooms, educators reported that the children are currently showing interest in music and animals. The environments included several related invitations, such as bug-themed materials, letters, paint, and colour-focused activities. Educators divided the children into smaller groups during the transition outdoors to support safety and maintain a calm, organized process. Throughout the observation, educators were observed singing, engaging in play with the children, and consistently using positive child-guidance strategies. Child-to-educator ratios were accurate and maintained at all times. Parent communication boards were current and displayed accurate information.
