General Comments

When licensing staff arrived, the child in attendance had just woken up from a nap and was engaged in play with the operator. The child began playing with some new big blocks and drawing on a play pad with a writing utensil. The operator mentioned they have been documenting and recently documented the lifecycle of a butterfly with the eventual release of real butterflies. Photos are posted in the entryway, and the operator was encouraged to place some documentation down at the children's level so children can revisit their learning. Photos of the children and their names posted at eye level can support children's literate identities and part of the early learning and childcare community.

The indoor space has been opened up and shelves placed along one wall with baskets identifying contents linking to curriculum areas. The outdoor space has also been expanded on with a large area cleaned up of bushes and branches to provide a shaded space for children to play. This space provides a sanded area with tires, kitchen, a bricked road, and materials. Children and the operator have planted several garden boxes throughout the space and a wooden patio with a large gazebo provides shade throughout the day and an area for art, reading, and table games.

The operator is continually considering how to expand on the play spaces for children. The operator is also considerate of parent's vacation schedules and their own by having an alternate provide care when they aren't available.
