General Comments During the QAM visit, all rooms were observed transitioning outdoors. Educators used a variety of strategies to support the transition. Some educators divided children into smaller groups to assist with outdoor clothing, while others dressed a few children at a time as the remaining children engaged in free play. In some rooms, music with actions was used to keep children engaged while waiting. All educators were observed using positive child guidance during the dressing process. The outdoor play area had been salted and sanded to reduce ice and increase safety. Children were observed sliding down a large snowbank, jumping on tires, and engaging in dramatic play in a restaurant-themed area. Classrooms contained a range of invitations and materials, including sensory activities, Magna-Tiles, outdoor-themed materials, playdough, print-practice activities, letters, and puzzles. Documentation was displayed on the walls in each room, reflecting activities related to elephants, sounds, numbers, puzzles, painting, puddle play, and mud exploration. The parent board, child ratios, and fire drill records were all accurate and up to date.
